26th ANNUAL CONVENTION PRELIMINARY PROGRAM Washington, March 5-9, 1985 "Emergent Structures and Persistent Patterns in a Waning Century"

Executive Director's Introduction

This Convention marks a transition to our second quarter century of service and to our fifth Executive Director, WILLIAM A. WELSH of Arizona State University who joins the University of South Carolina faculty January 1, 1985. He and ISA Program Co-Chairs MARGARET KARNS of the University of Dayton and MIRIAM STEINER of Defense Systems, Inc., have the invaluable assistance of the executive office staff that has made my term a personal as well as professional reward. It is my last chance to publicly applaud the teamwork which has assured ISA its unique status among scholarly societies.

The Newsletter Editor LEANN BROWN and her Associate Editors BRIDGET BALOG and KEVIN MURPHY not only make this preliminary program possible but also membership communication on a daily basis. Conventions Coordinator CECILE REGNER and Exhibits Director KAREN MOODY have ensured several successful annual meetings. Regions and Sections Officers LINDA ADAMS and RON PALMER continue to serve the special interests of our component units. All are outstanding Research Associates as well as administrative assistants.

The Byrnes International Center staff are inseparable from the institution of ISA itself. As Center Director and ISA Executive Director, any credit received must reflect upon those who actually assumed most of the responsibility but very rarely the rewards: Executive Assistant NANCY BAILES and Finance Director PHILLIP BLACK provide incomparable commitment; Systems Director JOHN GLEISSNER, Administrative Specialists MARSHA CURLES and JUDY YOUNGNER, and Staff Assistants CARLA RITCHIE and MICHAEL MCMULLEN are a superb support system for many structures within the Center and absolutely essential to my own capability.

My colleagues Chairman CHARLES KEGLEY of the Department of Government and International Studies and Director DONALD PUCHALA of the Institute of International Studies in particular lend their considerable resources to the overall operation of ISA, an organization which is obviously very much a network of association, personal and professional in nature, locally as it is nationally and internationally. Over the past six years and in nearly as many positions here, SANDRA HALL and SALLIE BUICE of the Department have been essential to me with their effort and insight. University President JAMES B. HOLDERMAN continues to underwrite materially and spiritually the activities of ISA along with his leadership in the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO and Chairmanship of the International Education Advisory Board.

My term has been inevitably defined and determined by the ISA presidents I have served. A final tribute as introduction to this exceptional program by KARNS and STEINER must go to JAMES N. ROSENAU of the University of Southern California, author of this twenty-sixth annual endeavor; BRUCE M. RUSSETT of Yale University; HAROLD K. JACOBSON of the University of Michigan; HENRY TEUNE of the University of Pennsylvania; DINA ZINNES of the University of Illinois; OLE R. HOLSTI of Duke University; CHADWICK F. ALGER of Ohio State University; and HERBERT P. KELMAN of Harvard University. As with all the above-mentioned, I look forward to many more years with them in collegial commitment to the ISA.
